Chapter 1 by Megan Crawford

I gazed around, sadly, as I closed my Chromebook and finished my homework. "Mom, when can I go out and meet people!?" I called, looking at the pictures on my walls. No other people besides me, my father, and my mum. Just us. No siblings, no friends. I was home schooled when I was 3, and mum says I'm really smart. But I have no human connection, and, right now, I was in a brazen mood, to finally get friends, let my parents get me out of the boundary zone!

"Actually, yes." mum said, and my eyes widened in shock. "Really?" I yelled, and jumped up, hugging her. "Well, I've been thinking with your father, and we are going to the beach." She announced, and left my room. "Oh, this information is not very credible but I believe it!" I squealed, and put on the first swimsuit I could find, which was a black two piece that actually fit me nicely. "Woah." I said, and looked at myself. Brushing back my red hair, I gathered all the supplies.

That day changed my life.
